

More snow to come

5 February 2009

Further snow is expected to push into many southern and eastern parts of England, including London, overnight and during the day on Friday.

Falls of between 2 and 5 cm are likely across a swathe of southern and south-eastern Britain, with up to 20 cm possible in higher parts such as the Cotswolds, Chilterns and North Downs.

Heavy snow showers are also likely to continue in the northern half of Scotland. Parts of Wales, Northern Ireland and north-west England could see further wintry showers during the day.

Overnight temperatures are expected to fall well below freezing with widespread ice on untreated roads and pavements for much of the day.

Download high-res version, 1.3 Mb

Patches of freezing fog may be an additional hazard in places for those travelling.

Beyond Friday, the outlook remains wintry with further spells of rain, sleet and snow for parts of the UK through the weekend and into next week.

The public are advised to stay up to date with the latest Met Office weather forecasts and warnings on the Met Office website.

Latest forecast

UK warnings of severe weather

What to do in severe weather